

THE STANFORD UNIVERSITY.

On Thursday last the Stanford Junior University at Palo Alto was opened amid impressive ceremonies. In commenting on this matter one can add nothing new to the following from the Sacramento Bee:

The formal opening of the Leland Stanford, Jr. University at Palo Alto is the most important educational event that has occurred in California, or in a certain sense, in the world. If Senator Stanford and the conditors he has selected to control the new institution shall succeed in carrying out the outlined scheme, education will be lifted out of the rut in which it has continued so long. The Senator's idea is that education ought to be a help in the affairs of life, and that the schools ought to inculcate information that will prove useful in the maturer years, when men and women are confronted with the practical requirements of existence. In other words he proposes that graduates from the great institution he has endowed so magnificently will be equipped with more than a head full of facts; that they shall be able to enter the field of life's activities and earn a living. They must so often fling at the higher education that it unfit people for practical life, has a good foundation in many respects, and we find college graduates driving street cars, or, perhaps, what is worse, crowding professions in lines for which Nature never designed them. The world is full of educated wrecks—wrecks because the education they received never took into consideration the actual use of knowledge or its adaptability to the needs of life. Natural mechanics have been transformed into poor lawyers, and men who ought to be on a farm are turned out to follow Esculapian. Education is too seldom an aid to mental development, and our scholars are too often helpless, dwarfed and useless creatures whose plight is pitiable.

If the new University shall succeed in imparting to education its true meaning—to draw out the latent abilities of the student instead of stuffing him with a burdensome feast of artificial intellectuality—the world will owe more to Leland Stanford and his wife, who is with him in all his labors for the advancement of humanity, than to any of the great educational leaders of history. It must be confessed that the scheme is a mighty undertaking, but the peerless endowment of the Leland Stanford, Jr. University affords the widest opportunity for the realization of its purpose.

A BAD EGG.

Judge Murphy, the man in San Francisco who is standing like a wall between the boudlers of California and the penitentiary, will go down to posterity as one of the most famous recluses that ever sat on the bench. His act will, however, not help the case of his masters, as it has roused the people to a state of fury that will in the end sweep aside the regues and give the city of San Francisco a better government.

Murphy is one of those pliant fellows who are elevated to the bench to serve certain people. No State in the Union has been cursed with such a rotten judiciary as California.

Look at Judge Sawyer, who on a meager salary left $300,000. Levy, who is building a palatial residence, and Field, who is reported worth nearly a million.

Such a state of affairs must topple in a grand crash some day, and the people will demand a clean, unbiased judiciary.

A good deal of bad poetry floats about the papers, but we are disposed to give the palm to the one printed in the Sacramento News and written by Dr. Clayton in aid of a Methodist festival. It was dreadfully bad, still not so bad as it would have been had it been a little longer.

A man by the name of Bull married a Miss Fetterfield at San Mateo. That must have been a kind of an all-embracing wedding.—Sacramento News.
